

Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to have their stations to air an anti-Kerry documentary days before the election is hypocritical.

Sinclair uses the public airwaves free of charge, and is obligated by law to serve the public interest.

Earlier, Sinclair prevented their affiliates from airing Nightline's tribute to American Soldiers killed in Iraq. Sinclair stated, "We do not believe such political statements should be disguised as news content." If the Sinclair Broadcasting Group viewed Nightline's tribute as "political," then please tell me why a 42-minute long propaganda film about John Kerry is not considered political?

I am terribly disappointed with Sinclair's manner of conducting their public service business. I would hope Sinclair reconsiders the airing of this film and hold to their earlier policy concerning politics.

Thank you.
